TASK 3. The Neolithic Age: the first human revolution

The Neolithic revolution

The discovery of agriculture and cattle raising took place about 10,000 years ago in the Middle East, when human beings learnt to cultivate plants and domesticate animals. Men and women gave up hunting and gathering as the only sources of living and learnt to produce their own food. Human beings' lives changed. This process can therefore be described as a revolution.

The first cultivated species were cereals: wheat in the Middle East and Europe, rice in Asia and corn in America. The first domesticated animals were horses, dogs, goats, sheep and oxen.

The emergence of these new economic activities forced human groups to settle near arable land. This is why they became sedentary and built villages, generally located next to rivers.

Neolithic craftsmen

A specialisation of work took place in villages. While some people cultivated fields, other people looked after the animals and others made weapons, fabrics, etc.

Two important technical innovations were developed in the Neolithic Age: fabrics and pottery.

- Fabrics were produced from animals' wool. Thread was first woven using bone spindles, and then by means of rudimentary looms.
- Pottery was shaped by hand and baked in a bonfire. New instruments appeared, such as vessels to keep the grain, bowls for eating and cooking, etc.

In the Neolithic Age, people used increasingly specialised tools, such as hoes to till the soil, sickles to harvest the crops or hand mills to grind the grain. These tools were still made of stone.

The Neolithic artist

An exceptional testimony of the new forms of living were the artistic manifestations. The human figure played an increasingly leading role in paintings and scenes began to be represented: groups of people hunting, harvesting vegetables, dancing, etc. Figures were very schematic. Extraordinary testimonies of these manifestations remain in the east of Spain.

Ceramic pieces began to be decorated with printed lines, shells, etc.
